Historical Note:

Dudley Saltonstall (1738-1796) was a sea captain, merchant, and privateersman best known for leading the Penobscot Expedition during the American Revolution. Saltonstall was originally from New London, Connecticut, and sailed as a privateer during the Seven Year's War. At the beginning of the Revolutionary War, he was one of the first men commissioned by Connecticut as a Navy captain, and commanded the flagship of an expedition that raided the Bahamas for cannons and gunpowder in 1776. In 1779, Saltonstall was placed in command of a fleet sent to dislodge the British from Castine, Maine. This assault, known as the Penobscot Expedition, ended in the capture or loss of the entire American fleet, and Saltonstall was subsequently court-martialed and dismissed from the Continental Navy. He spent the rest of the war as a profitable privateer.

Scope and Content:

This collection contains procedural notices, legal notes, and correspondence from Dudley Saltonstall's court martial over the failure of the Penobscot Expedition in 1779. These include legal summons, transcripts of testimony, court decisions, and Saltonstall's protests over a change in date that meant many of his witnesses would no longer be present. It also includes Saltonstall's appeal to Samuel Huntington, president of the Continental Congress.

While court martial documents form the bulk of the collection, there are a few letters and notes from Saltonstall's earlier career on the navy ship TRUMBULL in Connecticut. There is also a letter regarding a Revolutionary War pension for Joseph Williams of Norwich, Connecticut, dated 1821.
